

What Are The Differences Between Cosmetic Surgery And Reconstructive Surgery?

As the definition of cosmetic is imparting appeal and loveliness so as to make something pretty and more beautiful, so you might understand better about the range of cosmetics at the drug stores. For improving looks, there is a wide variety of products like powders, lipsticks and mascaras etc. This entire theory is applicable to cosmetic surgery too. These procedures too are designed to enhance the looks of a person.

The reason for thinking surgical procedures as reconstructive was due to the loss or damage of original part. The example may be a cancerous breast. The reconstruction operation is performed to rebuild a missing breast etc. So, it can be said that this surgery is for repairing the body parts that may be damaged due to disease, trauma, congenital defects or accidents.

One difference between reconstructive and cosmetic surgery is that former can be covered under medical insurance while latter can not be. This means that the hospital and physician's expenses are covered due to being health related but as far as cosmetic surgery is concerned, the issue is purely cosmetic and not health related.

Another difference is that in the case of cosmetic procedure, the person seeking it should be in a sound health condition both mentally and physically. This is required to get successful results from the op.

Reconstructive surgery is about appearance as well as functionality. Cosmetic one deals with appearances almost always. The example of former surgery can be cases of children that may have cleft lip or palate which causes problems in speaking in addition to impaired looks. Hence, here constructive procedure will be handy in order to restore functioning of mouth and normal living.

Lastly, be it any of the two, making sure that the surgeon is professional and experienced is very important. Recommendations from neighbors, family doctor or relatives will be good. And also cross check the surgeon on first appointment to see if he is appropriate to handle your case or no.
