

Testing For Paternity To Clear All Your Doubts

Testing for paternity in a simple language is to know the biological father of the child or to know the exact father. The test results determine if the father is the actual father of the child. It can be not only emotionally distressing but also have a lot of legal aspects to it.

If you are mature enough and have thought about dealing with the test results than by knowing the process of paternity testing can help you have a more stable future not only for the man but also for the woman.

So how does the test work? DNA found in every cell helps in determining the actual father of the child. The DNA structure of every human body is unique and the child will carry both the DNA sequence of both the parents and this will help in evaluating the whole identity of the father. If the child has a similar DNA structure as his presumed father then with 99.9% certainty the fatherhood can be concluded.

DNA of the child echoes the DNA of both the parent inheriting half from the mother and half from the father. Testing for paternity can be stressful for father, mother and the child hence the subject should be seriously thought about before making any decision.

DNA testing can be done after or before the birth of the child. Though the processes of analysis are the same but the way of collecting the DNA differs. The sample is taken from the fetus. There is a small amount of risk involved for the baby. After the baby is born the DNA sample by swabbing the cheek cells can be done. Sample DNA from both the parents are taken and it helps in determining the results. A laboratory analysis of all the three samples is done to finally come to a conclusion.

If you want to do the testing for paternity for your own satisfaction then you can buy a home testing kit and if you want to use the test result for legal purpose such as changing the name on the birth certificate or for filing child support then you have to go to a registered, authorized doctor to have one done.

Home DNA test is more for individual satisfaction and to make the life more stable. Legal testing has a lot of legal documentation that needs to be addressed first before taking any action unlike the home test which is much simpler. Just collect the sample and send it to a company and find the results in maximum three days of average time however some companies take longer time to determine and send you the results.

Before you make up your mind on doing a paternity test be prepared for the consequences also. Sometime the results can be very shattering spoiling the whole relationship. The ready DNA kit will help you find all the answers to your paternity issues.
