

Seven Tips For Choosing An Office Party Band

Music Creates Community: Hiring an office party band is a way to connect with your workers through the power of music. Because your office likely has people who value many different types of music, it is important to select the right musical group. There are seven steps that may be followed for maximum enjoyment by party attendees.

Take a Survey: Ask your colleagues what kinds of music they prefer. This information will be useful in genre selection. While many bands can tailor their set-lists to audience, if most of the office likes traditional rock and roll, this will be helpful in the selection process. All of this information may be compiled in a list to present to prospective bands.

Locate the Stage: A stage does not have to be built for the party. The stage area may be made by clearing away some garbage cans from a walkway area. It is just important for there to be an open area for people to watch the band, and a spot for the musical group to plug in their instruments if necessary. The band will also be able to tell you about their specific space needs. Many of them are used to playing in different environments and are generally flexible.

Find the Perfect Band: In selecting an office party band, it is possible to interview a prospective group for a good fit. You can ask them what kinds of music they are able to play. Also, some bands have a great deal of experience in diverse settings. It may be helpful to know about their amount of experience.

Listening to the Band: This is not always necessary, but you could ask the group if you could hear them before the office party. Some bands will agree to a brief audition. Other bands have a video available for viewing of a past show. Instead of listening to the band, sometimes a band will refer you to another company that may be able to speak on their behalf. Office parties with live entertainment have become more popular in recent years, so client referral is rather common.

Office Involvement with the Band: After selecting the perfect group, there are a couple of questions you can ask them. Are they willing to take requests from your coworkers if they know the songs? If so, prepare to take a list of recommendations from your excited colleagues at the event. Everyone has a favorite song.

Publicize the Party!: You can let your colleagues know that you will be doing something a little different by hand delivering little band fliers publicizing the show. Another alternative is to have the band be a complete surprise. A third option is to send out an email to everyone about the special upcoming event so that everyone is not double-booked.

Celebrate!: It is finally time to relax and enjoy the fruits of your labor. Office party bands typically have a lot of experience in entertaining crowds. Just as you are a professional at your job, you can sit back and let them do what they are best at!

About the Author

Expert Sean Malley is a member of 'Soul Desire' featured at the <http://www.souldesire.co.uk> website. Having a live Party Band will make all the difference to the success of your event. Find out more about hiring a professional Soul Tribute Band from this site.

Source: <http://www.interester.com>