The first advantage is the fact that you are able to reach a global audience. How many people are going to be able to see your adverts on the Internet? Well the answer to this is a limitless number, as long as you are able to market your company in the right way. There are hundreds of millions of people on the Internet at any one time, and if you are good at advertising what you are offering, and generating high streets of traffic then you should be able to reach a far larger portion of the market.

The second advantage, is that you are able to get your message across to a specific portion of the market if you so wish. Rather than simply getting your message out there to all and sundry, you can specify what people are going to be seeing, and who is going to be seeing it.

Last of all, when you advertise online, you are able to find out exactly how many people are viewing your ads. As a result of this you can tweak and change your advertising as much as you like in order to improve your levels of traffic.
